GROWTH

For the past 20 years, the public charter school movement has been a leader in innovation and education reform. By unleashing an environment of creativity in states and communities, charter schools have demonstrated that children of all backgrounds are capable of achieving high standards and that college and career readiness is a goal attainable for all. Charter schools have led efforts to narrow achievement gaps and are showing that success is possible in neighborhoods where schools have been failing for generations.

For these reasons, public charter schools have been the fastest-growing sector of America's public education system. Beginning with a handful of charter schools in 1992, the number of charters has grown rapidly, especially in the past four years. Today, demand for public charter schools is at an all time high. In 41 states and the District of Columbia, more than 2 million students – almost 5 percent of total enrollment in public schools – now attend a charter school. The growth in public charter school enrollment presented in this report shows that parent demand for school options continues.

For seven years, the National Alliance for Public Charter Schools (NAPCS) has tracked the growth in student enrollment at public charter schools. This report identifies school districts that have the highest percentage and highest number of public school students enrolled in public charter schools. In communities where families have choice, families are increasingly selecting public charter schools over the traditional public schools. The 2012 Phi Delta Kappa (PDK)/Gallup poll indicates that two thirds of Americans favor charter schools.¹ A recent poll of Detroit residents, for example, found that more than half of them believe charters are a better option than the schools in the traditional public system.² In countless other communities, parents are clamoring for more high quality public options for their children. As a result, the public education landscape is shifting in many major cities.

Today, a record number of school districts—seven—have at least 30 percent of their public school students enrolled in public charter schools. Charter schools in New Orleans enroll an astounding 76 percent of public school students. A total of 25 school districts have 20 percent or more of their public school students enrolled in charter schools, 18 more than when we first printed this report seven years ago. More than 100 districts now have at least 10 percent of public school students in charter schools.

These numbers illustrate that demand for options within the public school system remains strong. And with more than 610,000 additional students across the country on waiting lists to attend charter schools, these numbers are likely to rise in the future.

NAPCS gathered public school enrollment data to find districts where the highest local proportions of students are enrolled in public charter schools. The market share table below shows the results for the 2011-2012 school year.

A CLOSER LOOK

New Orleans Remains Number One in Market Share:

An astounding 76 percent of public school students in New Orleans attended public charter schools in the 2011-2012 school year. Not only are charters in New Orleans serving a higher percentage of public school students than anywhere else in the nation, they are also the highest performing sector of public schools in the city.³ One impressive detail about the performance of New Orleans charter schools is that they are approaching Louisiana state average achievement, an accomplishment rarely achieved by urban public schools.

District of Columbia and Detroit Tied for Second in Market Share:

For the past four years, charter schools in the District of Columbia held the second spot for largest charter school market share nationwide. In the 2011-2012 school year, D.C. shared that spot with Detroit Public Schools. Both school districts had a market share percentage of 41 percent, up from 39 percent for D.C. and up from 37 percent for Detroit in 2010-2011.

Eight New School Districts Join the Ranks of Top Market Share:

Eight school districts that were not on the list for top market share percentage in the last report made it onto the list for 2011-2012. The districts include: San Antonio, Indianapolis, Roosevelt, Ariz., Adams County, Colo., Grand Rapids, Mich., Philadelphia, Milwaukee, and Phoenix Union High, Ariz. With the addition of these school districts, the leaders in market share list now includes 20 school districts (because of ties in percentages), up from 12 in 2010-2011.

Seven School Districts Reach at Least 30 Percent Market Share:

This year, St. Louis (31 percent) joins New Orleans (76 percent), Detroit (41 percent), District of Columbia (41 percent), Kansas City, Mo. (37 percent), Flint, Mich., (33 percent) and Gary, Ind. (31 percent) with at least 30 percent of public school students enrolled in public charter schools.

Twenty Five School Districts Are at 20 Percent or More:

When NAPCS first compiled this report in 2005, a market share of 20 percent would land a community in the fourth highest position. The number of communities with at least a 20 percent market share has steadily climbed from six in 2005-2006 to eight in 2006-2007, 12 in 2007-2008, 14 in 2008-2009, 16 in 2009-2010, 18 in 2010-2011, and now 25 in 2011-2012. There are now 110 school districts with at least a 10 percent market share (see Appendix A).

Los Angeles Again Tops the List in Number of Public Charter School Students:

Nearly 100,000 students attended public charter schools in the Los Angeles Unified School District during the 2011-2012 school year, the highest number for any school district in the country. The number of students enrolled in public charter schools in Los Angeles, alone, would place the Los Angeles charter schools in the top 30 of the 100 largest school districts in the United States.⁴ Public charter schools in Los Angeles enrolled 19,191 more students in 2011-2012 than in 2010-2011, a growth rate of 24 percent.

Ten School Districts with Largest Number of Students Enroll Significant Percentage of Charter School Sector.

The 10 districts with the largest number of students in public charter schools represent 22.9 percent of the total public charter school population nationwide—a total of 458,215 students out of roughly 2 million. Between the 2010-2011 and 2011-2012 school years, the top ten districts increased public charter school enrollment by over 62,000 students, a growth rate of 16 percent.

Strong Charter School Growth in Districts with Large Numbers of Public Charter School Students:

Among the 50 districts with the largest charter school student enrollments, 29 districts had growth in the number of students enrolled in public charters by 10 percent or more between the 2010-2011 and 2011-2012 school years. The Clark County School district experienced the largest growth (64 percent) in the number of charter school students enrolled, primarily due to four new charter schools opening there in the 2011-2012 school year.

Three School Districts Repeat Top Growth Two Years in a Row.

Three school districts made the list for highest percentage growth in public charter school students for two consecutive years: Los Angeles, Memphis, and New York City. Enrollment in public charter schools in these three school districts grew by 52,502 students between 2009-2010 and 2011-2012, a two year growth rate of 52 percent.

High Charter School Market Share More Prevalent in the Midwest and Northeast; Significant Growth in the South and West.

The map on the following spread presents data from the three lists of school districts with the highest charter school market share, enrollment, and growth.

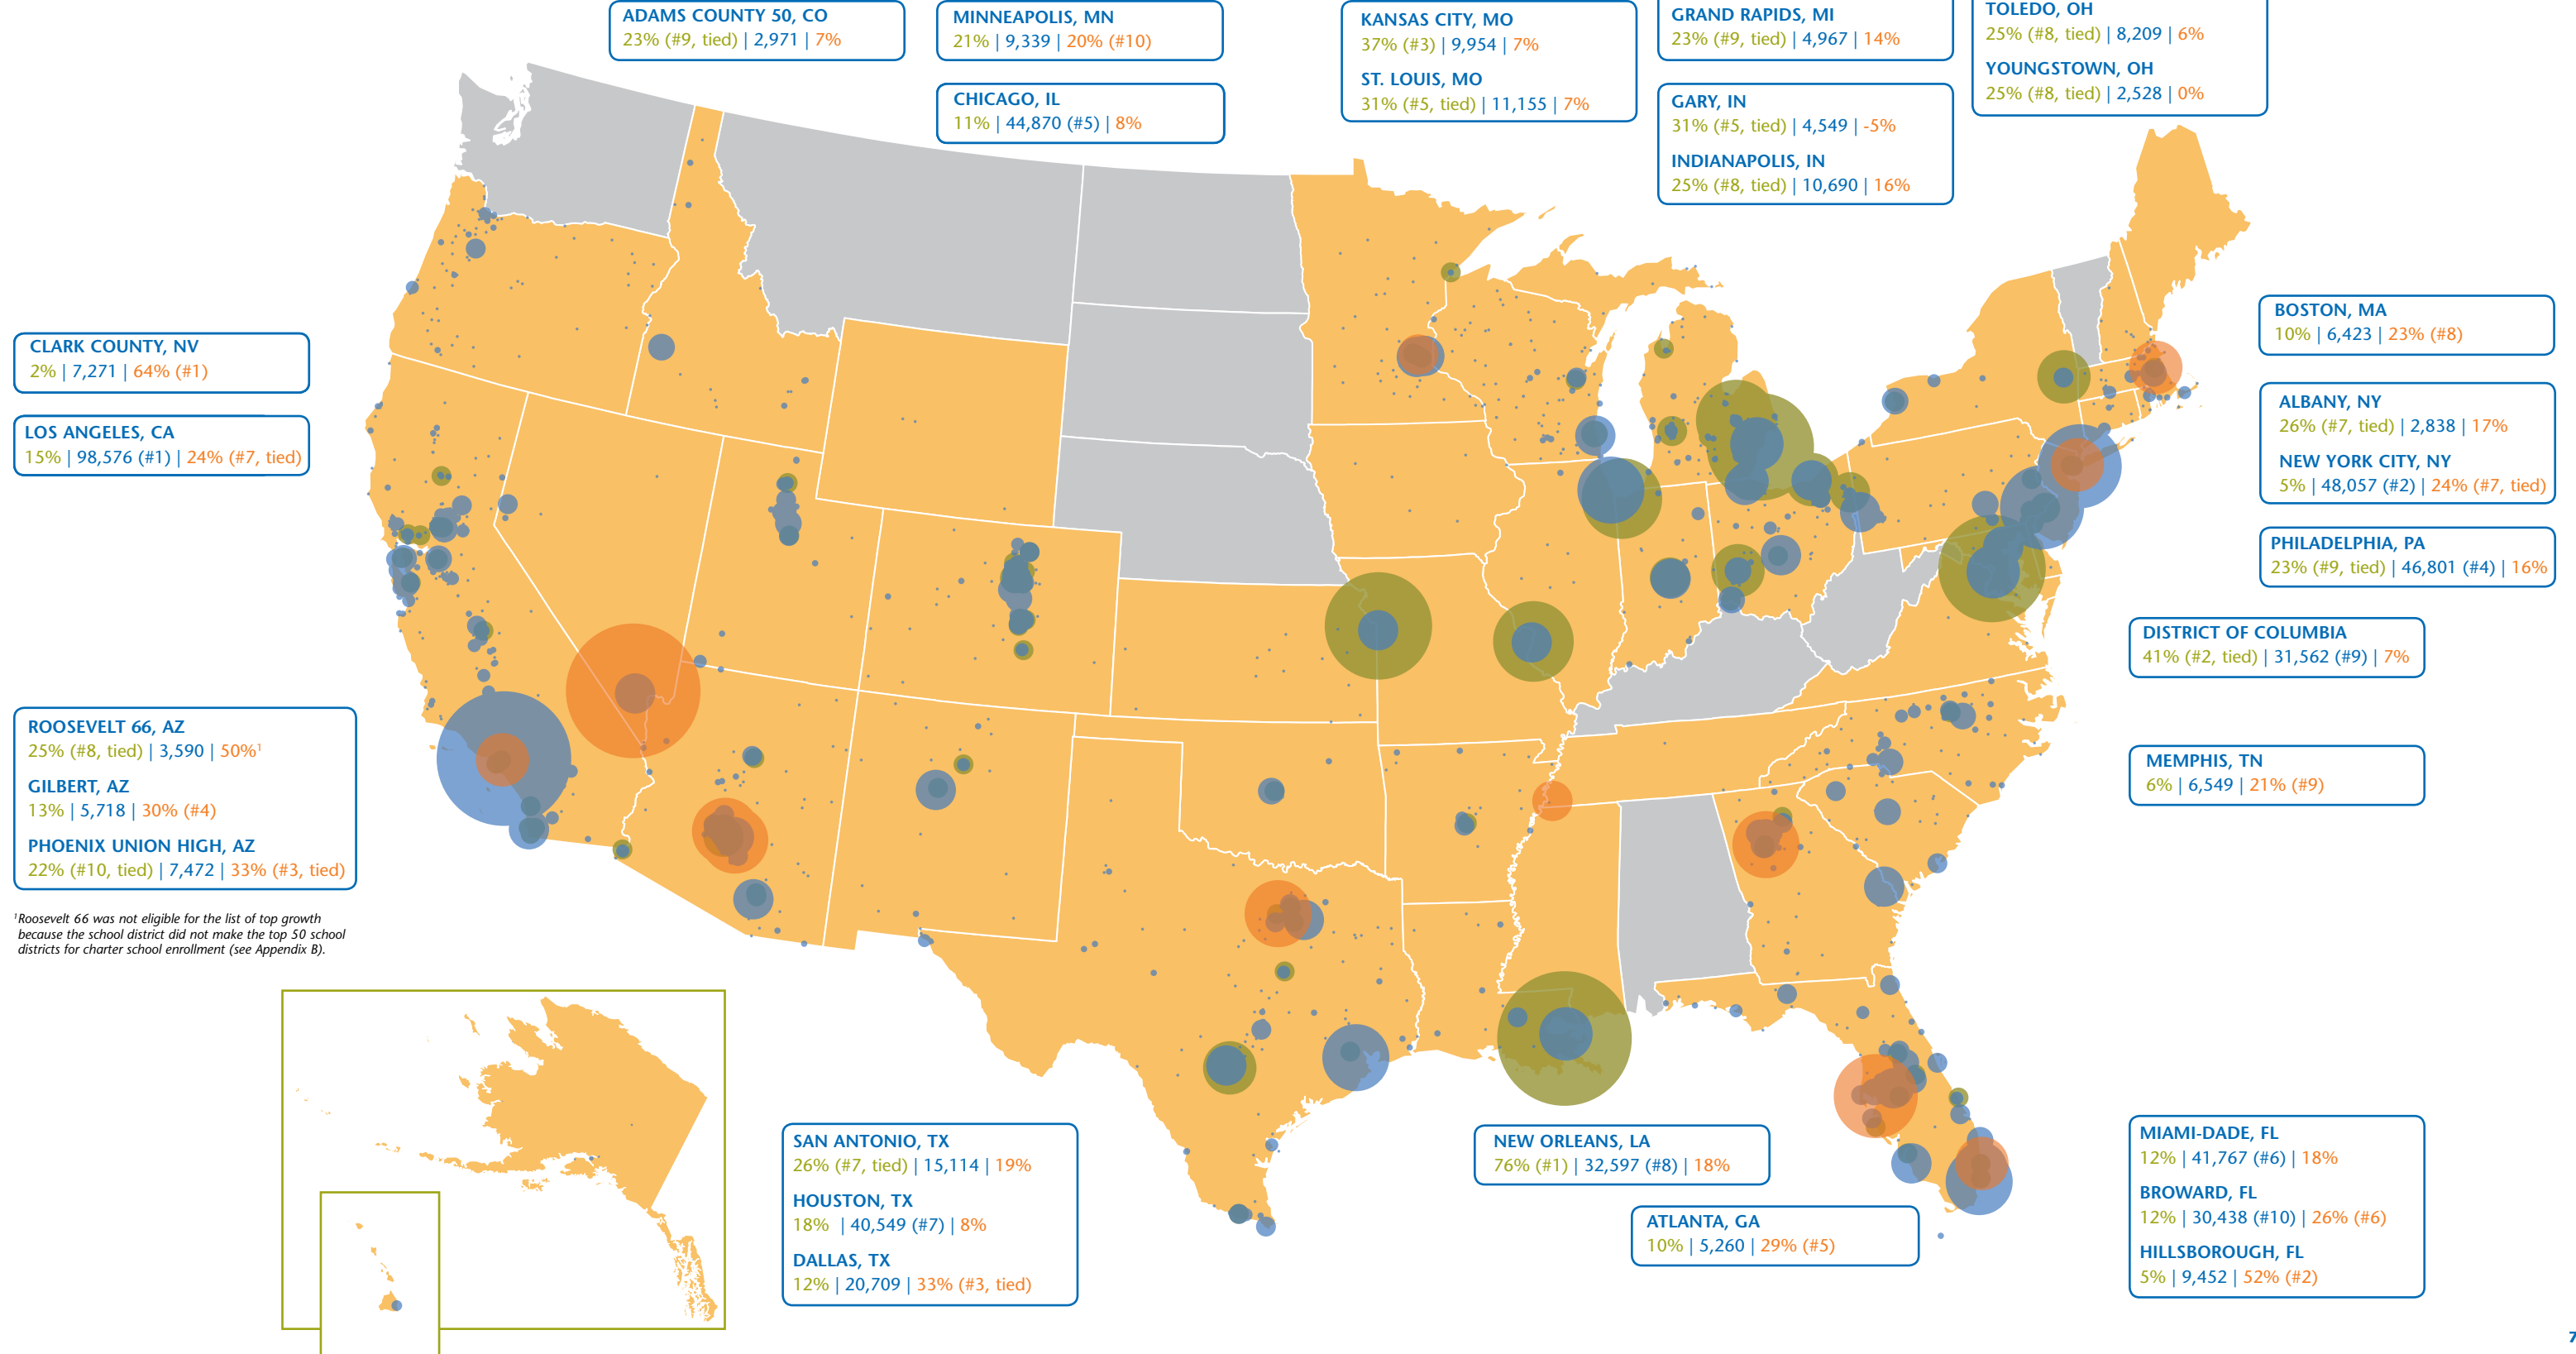

The geographic display of the data shows that school districts with high concentrations of students enrolled in charter schools are more likely to be located in the Midwest and Northeast regions of the country.

In contrast, a large portion of the districts with high growth in the number of charter school students are located in the South and West regions. School districts with large numbers of students enrolled in charter schools are spread out across the nation.

METHODOLOGY

1. In this analysis, we examined market share in school districts with more than 10,000 public school students (both charter and non-charter) in the 2011-2012 school year. We gathered charter and non-charter public school enrollment data from state department of education databases and personnel.
2. More than 50 percent of charter schools nationwide are their own independent Local Education Agencies (LEAs), rather than part of traditional public school district LEAs. In the past, this fact meant that it was not always clear as to which public school district charter schools were physically located, especially for charter schools located in large metropolitan cities with more than one school district (e.g., Phoenix, Arizona and Houston, Texas). For the three most recent editions of the “Top 10” charter communities by market share report, we used a geo-coding method to increase the accuracy of identifying the geographically relevant school districts for each charter. Specifically, we geo-coded every charter school that is an independent LEA to the geographically relevant traditional public school district LEA by mapping charter school addresses onto school district boundary maps available through the U.S. Census Bureau.
3. For Michigan and Ohio, we used student resident enrollment data that indicate the total number of students attending charter schools based on the district where students reside. The student residence enrollment data present more accurate information regarding how many students from a school district attend charter schools. Some students may attend charter schools outside of their traditional district boundaries.
4. The growing numbers of virtual charter schools enrolling children from across an entire state presents another issue. Because many states haven’t developed student enrollment reporting systems that allow the sorting of individual students by community of residence at each charter school, we excluded virtual school enrollment data from both the charter and total district enrollment data when calculating market share percentages. We recognize that this decision might create some undercounting in school districts where large numbers of students are enrolled in virtual charter schools. We do include enrollment from virtual schools in the District of Columbia and Hawaii where there is only one school district in the states and in Michigan and Ohio where we have resident enrollment data and we know the district where students live.
5. The approximate number of 610,000 students on waiting lists to attend charter schools was estimated from a national survey of charter schools during the 2011-2012 school year with a 30 percent response rate.
